Supporting BIPOC Leaders in Public Service

On October 15, the institute, the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences and the School of Public Policy co-hosted “Supporting Aspiring BIPOC Public Policy and Service Leaders”, a gathering of institute staff and leaders from across campus.

In brainstorming sessions, participants discussed the under- and over-representation of BIPOC communities in public policy and public service leadership roles; barriers to entering these fields; networking/mentorship for aspiring and current BIPOC public policy/service leaders; and the next steps and further discovery leading to design and implementation.

Participants joined the gathering from the Office of Equity and Inclusion, the Department of Sociology, the Berthiaume Center for Entrepreneurship, the Isenberg School of Management and others.

Boston Marathon Brings a $500 million Economic Impact to the State

On November 13th, the Boston Athletic Association (B.A.A.) and Meet Boston released an institute economic impact report conducted by the Economic and Public Policy Research (EPPR) group, which was commissioned to study the direct impact of one of the oldest and most historic marathons in the world, the Boston Marathon presented by Bank of America.

The $509.1 million impact represents the B.A.A.'s operational costs, spending by marathon participants and, and other secondary economic impacts from household spending, taxes and vendor spending. For this report, the Donahue Institute examined the two categories of BAA expenditures – year-round operations and a larger set of spending associated with marathon weekend. Read the report.
